LINCS initiative « WHAT NEXT? »

Francesca Bassi - SystemX

- The best thing in my current job. I get to choose what to work on/how to work on topics (within reasonable limits)

- The worst thing in my current job. Sensibly smaller salary than in a private company, for positions with comparable seniority (widely compensated for by liberty & flexibility, if you ask me!)

Gabriele Castellano - Huawei

- The best thing in my current job. Chill and friendly environment, never worked outside working hours.

- The worst thing in my current job. 100% work from office, no flexibility compared to academia.

Céline Comte - CNRS

- The best thing in my current job. Freedom to choose my research topics (+ no teaching load).

- The worst thing in my current job. A lot of self-pressure (+ not-so-high salary)

Rémy Léone - Scaleway

- The best thing in my current job. I have the opportunity to be in contact with IT in practice. To have a variety of study subjects. To make a living without doing unethical things. To be able to engage in trade union activism. To train as many people as I can.

- What I don't like about my current job. The bureaucracy inherent in a large human group. The affairs of internal policies which, under cover of objectivity, can be the occasion for a clash of egos. The lack of curiosity of some collaborators. The stagnation of certain levels. Hypocrisy: the appearance of politeness which is often a way of not assuming and clearly describing the power relations between individuals.

Leonardo Linguaglossa - TP

- The best thing in my current job. I can work on potentially any research topic I have in mind, and I have freedom to choose how to organize my work

- The worst thing in my current job. As you may know, dealing with bureaucracy and being limited by the technological and design choices of my environment. + facing lack of interests by younger people :(

Flavia Salutari – BNP Paribas

- The best thing in my current job. The environment, the autonomy in decision-making and getting feedback from / interacting with people doing different jobs (and who find what I do useful to simplify their daily tasks).

- The worst thing in my current job. The fixed schedule and the lack of autonomy in planning my time + being stuck one/the same activity.
